Hauben's work adorns station

STAINED GLASS artwork by Riverdalian Daniel Hauben now adds pizzazz to the elevated train platforms of the Freeman Street station, on the No. 2 and 5 lines, in the Bronx.

The work, completed after a five-year collaboration with Gordon Stained Glass Studios, is based on Mr. Hauben's paintings of the Bronx. Images of Yankee Stadium, Westchester Square and other Bronx scenes are visible on the uptown and downtown sides of the station, as well as from the street below.

'Mango Vendor,' at left, is one of four four-by-eight-foot glass panels on display.

Mr. Hauben, a veteran artist, was chosen as part of the MTA Arts for Transit Program.
